He knew, also, that is had vainly sought an introduction, but he git and her mother did not invite the mineship of their neighbors and their neighbors and their neighbors and their neighbors are the neighbors and their neighbors are the mineship of the statistic and he had relied it by his hasty temper. He nat then to work, but his thoughts did not fee, and with bitter self-reproach he inced into his coat and went downtown. It was late in the afternoon when he had a little note, written formally in third person. Mrs. William Hillson reliefizes to Mr. Thomas Thurston for annoyance her daughter had caused in. Miss Hillson, knowing Mr. Thursin to be a late sleeper, had borrowed in paper for a mothent to look at the dweltament of a dry goods store, insuding to put it back at once. She consided by assuring Mr. Thurston that the offense would not be repeated.

Be struggled for more than an hour life reply, then he throw the last carefully worded epistle into the waste basket and strode to the door. When he had mag the Hillson bell, he was half sorry fint he had done so, but he waited brows. are lived across the hall from him with
